Ink jet printing is non-impact and is generally easy and inexpensive to perform. Ink jet printing systems generally utilize ink jet printing heads that have a plurality of nozzles from which droplets of ink are ejected. If a droplet of ink travels along a path which is essentially perpendicular to the surface of the substrate, the droplet strikes the surface and forms a spot. If the path of the droplet is at an angle to the substrate, the droplet will tend to spread. For example, when a cone shaped droplet is released, the droplet may spread over the surface of the substrate such that the diameter of the spot formed by the droplet is larger than the diameter of the orifice
